Soccer and Society in Modern Latin America

Course description

Soccer -known as fútbol in Spanish or futebol in Portuguese- is, without doubt, the single most popular sport in the world. In most countries of Latin America, it has become the national pastime, the only exceptions being Caribbean countries such as Cuba, Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, and Venezuela, where baseball occupies that place. This course will offer students the opportunity to explore and understand the complexities of Latin American societies using soccer as a cultural and sociological window. At a more general level, it will also allow them to think critically about the social, cultural, and political implications of sports and entertainment in contemporary societies. We will discuss, among other issues, the reasons why soccer captured the imagination of Latin American peoples; the relationship between the dissemination of soccer and patterns of cultural, political, and economic change; the connections between soccer and the shaping of national identities in the region; the manipulation of soccer by military regimes in the 1970s; the racial, class, and gender dynamics behind soccer as a practice and a spectacle; the appearance of violent soccer fans and their connections with contemporary economic and social trends such as the spread of neo-liberalism and the forces of globalization; and the use of soccer as a marker of identity by Latin American immigrants in the United States.

Course policies

1. Students are expected to attend lectures consistently. A passing grade will be hard to achieve without regular attendance. Students must also consistently read the assigned materials and actively participate in class discussions.
2. A common form of academic dishonesty, plagiarism, will not be tolerated. Students must become familiar with the University of Oregon rules about this issue. More information will be offered at the appropriate time.
3. An atmosphere of mutual respect, tolerance, and fairness will be enforced by the instructor. Students must behave in ways proper to an academic environment--i.e. no talking, eating, or texting during lecture.
4. Cell phones and other electronic devices cannot be used during class. They must be turned off. The instructor will interrupt class if one or more students are caught using their devices.
5. Laptops and tablets are allowed ONLY for note-taking, and students who use them in class must seat in the front row. If a student uses his/her laptop for other purposes during class time (web browsing, chatting, e-mail checking), he/she will be banned from bringing a laptop computer to the classroom.

6. “Incomplete” grades will be granted only in cases of extreme need and only to those students that have an acceptable record of class attendance and have at least a C average in their evaluations. Students that need an “incomplete” grade must make arrangements with the instructor on or before the last week of classes.
