Changing Leadership: Expectations for Chairs

February 8-10, 2006
The Florida Mall Hotel
Orlando, Florida

Hosted by:
Kansas State University, Division of Continuing Education and
The IDEA Center
An internet cafe will be available to Academic Chairpersons participants from 7:00 am to 5:00 pm in Boardroom Three.

The Conference Program

The old adage that “the only constant in our lives is change” is true for an academic chairperson. At one time, the chair’s job was to teach nearly a full load and attend to administrative details, coordinate evaluation procedures, and convene departmental meetings. Expectations for today’s chairs are quite different.

While every campus is different, it is likely that a chair will experience new expectations wherever they reside. Many will be asked to be more entrepreneurial, to forge new interdisciplinary relationships, to make better use of technology, to better define and assess student learning, to foster alumni fundraising, and to deal with more complex litigious issues. In addition, external funding agencies and state and national governments increasingly seek accountability evidence at the department level. For a chair initially employed as a disciplinary expert, these expectations can be daunting; but they can also be viewed as wonderful opportunities to pursue a departmental vision in creative ways.

How changing leadership expectations impact the professional life of the chair is the focus of the Twenty-Third Annual Academic Chairpersons Conference.

10:30 am-12:20 pm Workshops/Panel

Salon I
1. (Workshop) Assessing Assessment Plans
Susan Hatfield
Winona State University

This workshop should be of interest to those who already have program level assessment plans and those who know they need to write one. This will be a hands-on session, focused on the criteria for an effective assessment plan (for those participants who need to write one) and critically evaluating the plan’s implementation (for those who already have a plan).

Salon III
2. (Workshop) Learning Disabilities in the Workplace: Awareness Workshop for Academic Chairpersons
Erma Verhage
Tara Coleman
Jean Darbyshire
Laurel Littrell
Kansas State University

This informational workshop is an awareness tool for chairpersons to understand and recognize characteristics and consequences of learning disabilities in the workplace. Legal rights and responsibilities of employers and individuals with learning disabilities will be discussed. Accommodations for specific learning disabilities will be identified. This presentation is informational only.

Forum East One and Two

3. (Panel) Strategies for Recruiting and Retaining Minority Faculty at Majority and Minority Universities
Sarah Price
Florida A&M University
Delano I. Tucker
Norfolk State University

A panel presentation designed to provide practical information regarding how to recruit and retain minority administrators, faculty, and staff at minority and major universities and colleges. The panel will give specific details regarding: a) how to advertise to attract minorities, b) the importance of the search committee, c) how to respond to applicants before, during, and after an interview, d) critical points during the initial campus visit, e) quality mentoring during early employment, and f) different methods of ensuring equity. The panel will also provide common oversights and/or mistakes that are made during the employment process and strategies to ensure that such errors do not occur. Each panelist will share his/her experience regarding employment selection from the standpoint of both faculty and administrator, and provide perceived strengths and areas of needed improvement.

4. (Workshop) Initiating Change at the Departmental Level: Applying Adaptive Leadership
Lori Coakley
Bryant University
Linda Randall
University of Baltimore

In response to today's changing academic environment, department chairs need to apply adaptive leadership. Adaptive leadership is a process, eliciting solutions and knowledge from department members, while promoting flexibility for faculty. It provides a framework for attaining employee commitment. Participants will be given a series of case scenarios to resolve, using adaptive leadership.

10:30-11:20 am Concurrent Paper Presentations

Symposium East
5. Challenges, Choices, Changes and the Chair
Merribeth Bruning
Eastern Illinois University
Brenda Gulledge
University of Tennessee at Martin
Challenges are a daily constant in the life of the chair. Personality traits affect choices and impact the ability of the chair to deal with changes and maintain vision to move a department forward. The session provides reflections and resources from two department chairs from differing institutions that seek to be effective chairs who meet challenges, make choices, and cope with changes.

6. Blinded by the White: Attracting and Retaining a Diverse Faculty
Mikki Meadows
Eastern Illinois University

Twenty-eight states in the nation have a minority population of 20% or less. Many academic programs across the US have the need to attract and retain diverse faculty in an environment that is homogeneous. This paper presentation will share strategies that will help academic professionals maintain diversity within their faculty.

8. Transition from Faculty Member to Chair: A Grounded Theory
Brenda M. Coppard
Creighton University
The outcomes of a grounded theory study conducted on four faculty members' transition to chairperson in occupational therapy departments in the US are presented. The paper will identify core areas that affect a person's transition to the role of department chair and will articulate strategies to facilitate this transition. Practical recommendations will include a "toolbox" of resources for new chairs, those aspiring to this position, or for administrators who must hire or appoint a chairperson.

Symposium West
9. Case Studies of Student Cheating in Engineering
Brian Towler
University of Wyoming
Examples of cheating in the Engineering College at the University of Wyoming will be presented. Engineering chairs have to deal with a lot more than plagiarism. The forms of cheating seen at our institution include:
(a) Copying exam and homework problems from solution manuals which are now receiving a wider distribution;
(b) Passing information via cell phones;
(c) Downloading computer programs from the Internet;
(d) Copying lab reports from previous years' students;
(e) Other rather ingenious or opportunistic methods.
The due process for students starts with a report to the Dean's office where punishment is ultimately decided. The student may appeal the action to the University Appeals Committee.

2:00-3:50 pm Workshops

Salon I
10. (Workshop) Using IDEA Student Ratings to Support Program Assessment and Accreditation
Bill Pallett
Amy Gross
The IDEA Center
IDEA Student Ratings of Instruction is a national system used by nearly 200 institutions. As a learning-centered instrument, IDEA can be used to address program input, process, and outcome questions. Normative, longitudinal, and benchmarking information increases its applicability. Examples of how group summary reports, electronic data files, and forthcoming peer reports allow institutions to combine data for use in program review and accreditation will be discussed. This session is relevant to those interested in program assessment/ accreditation.

Salon III
11. (Workshop) Servant Leadership in a Time of Hard Choices
Daniel Wheeler
University of Nebraska-Lincoln
In these difficult times, higher education leadership is facing hard choices. Although the present trend seems to centralize authority and decision-making, an alternative is servant leadership. Participants will learn what constitutes servant leadership and its applicability.

Forum East One and Two
12. (Workshop) RACI Charting to Clarify the Ambiguities of Shared Leadership
Shirley Williams
Gonzaga University
This presentation engages participants in the process of RACI charting, a technique used to help departments deal with issues of change. RACI charting helps clarify functional areas, key activities, and decision points where ambiguities may exist. Participants will engage in the activities of the RACI process designed ultimately to enhance team planning, effective communication, and departmental operations.

13. (Workshop) How Effective Induction Programs Support New Faculty
   David F. Darnell
   Catherine Gillespie
   Drake University School of Education

This session will be particularly useful for chairs who are working with new faculty members, whether or not these professors are experienced in higher education. Informal and informative in design, the presentation will provide participants with an array of ideas for implementing or improving induction programs in their own settings.

14. Maintaining Disciplinary Currency Through the Scholarship of Engagement
   Charles F. Harrington
   University of North Carolina at Pembroke
   David Schultz
   University of Southern Indiana

Recent progress in broadening the definition of faculty scholarship has focused on the work of Boyer in recognizing the scholarly contributions of faculty engagement with civic stakeholders. The authors focus on the added benefit of developing and maintaining curricular currency through scholarship of engagement projects and provide helpful guidelines for individual faculty and departments who are considering engagement activities.

15. Leading Organizational Change: Techniques for Positive Impact
   Joseph Linskey
   Centenary College

As higher education continues to search for improved ways to deal with the changing global environment and accompanying diverse student needs, our institutions must deal with continual changes in operations and methods of providing services. Department chairs must demonstrate true leadership so as to move their followers forward in a positive direction for the benefit of each individual employee, the department, and the institution.

16. Assessing the Level of Professional Satisfaction of Department Chairpersons
   Catherine Rice
   Western CT State University

Performance and retention rates can be directly influenced by the level of job satisfaction employees have from their overall work environment. In order to improve the wellbeing and motivation of employees, the factors that influence satisfaction must be understood before changes could be effected to improve or enhance satisfaction. This study investigated the satisfaction of chairpersons in a state university system utilizing two instruments to assess and rate satisfaction. The instruments were the Job Descriptive Index and the Job in General scales. The results potentially provide administrators with information which, for example, can be utilized to plan interventions in areas where satisfaction is low with the intent to improve performance and retention.

17. Search and Employ: 10 Steps to Successful Academic Hires
   Lauren A. Vicker
   St. John Fisher College

Of all the duties that befall academic chairs and deans, leading a search for a faculty or administrative hire can be among the most daunting. The key to successful searches is the use of a systematic process, which the chair and the members of the search committee agree upon at the outset and use throughout the search.

18. (Workshop) The Power of Perspective: An Underutilized Stress Skill for Department Chairs
   Tim Hatfield
   Winona State University

It is a truism that academic department chairs are often among the most likely candidates for stress in their departments because they are perpetually in the middle. Many demands are directed at them both from their department colleagues and from higher administration, regardless of whether sufficient time or resources exist to meet the demands. This hands-on workshop will help participants explore ways to utilize their own ability to conceptualize/label/perceive their situation in ways that will help them to cope more effectively with the inevitable heavy demands of their role as department chair.
Salon III
19. (Workshop) Promoting Interdisciplinary Team-Teaching Across the Curriculum: A Working Model
   Kathleen O'Dowd
   Madonna University

Promoting cross-disciplinary collaboration among faculty through designing/teaching theme-based courses promotes collegiality, professional growth, and scholarship. It may also be a remedy for burnout resulting from years of repetitive teaching. This workshop will provide a model for creating team-taught interdisciplinary courses and integrating them into the curriculum.

Forum East One and Two
20. (Workshop) Just in Time: Effective Use of Departmental Meetings
   Bob Bialozor
   Gonzaga University
   Bill Bialozor
   Slippery Rock University

This workshop examines the central role of effective meetings in increasing professional productivity and enhancing individual and group satisfaction. Practical recommendations for optimal use of meeting time and overcoming common barriers are presented and processed. Participants will focus on specific strategies including decision processes, working governance rules and involvement tactics.

Forum West One and Two
21. (Workshop) Student Retention – Analyze, Classify, and Evaluate Your Institutional Practices
   Linzi Kemp
   Empire State College, SUNY

This workshop encourages participants to analyze their institutional practices that contribute to and negate student retention. A fresh look is taken at student retention by using an adapted marketing process (BCG) to classify processes:

- STARs - Practices that need investment (time/money) to retain students.
- QUESTION MARKs - Practices with uncertain contribution to student retention.
- CASH COWs - Established and successful practices that retain students.
- DOGs - Practices that do not retain students.

Discussion leads to recommendations for the future to convert all institutional practices to positive supporters of student retention.

23. Empowering Faculty, Establishing Teamwork, and Offering Recognition are Ingredients in Building a Successful Department
   Mohammad Hosni
   Kansas State University

A department head is entrusted with the enormous responsibility of counseling and guiding faculty, staff, and students, dealing with curriculum matters, handling budget issues, and creating a cohesive learning environment. As a leader, a chairperson must create a learning environment filled with trust, fairness, collegiality, accountability and respect for all. As a manager, a chair is required to have a vision, identify priorities, set goals, take the lead, communicate expectations, and care for the most valuable asset of the organization: the people. And in today’s fast changing world of global economy, internet communication, new technology, and demand for new skills, a chairperson must be proactive, flexible, open-minded and possess the ability to see the “big picture.” This paper describes how empowering faculty, establishing teamwork, and offering recognition have resulted in the complete revitalization of a department.

The assessment of student learning outcomes requires chair leadership and contributions from faculty and students. Resistance results from fear of more work, limited resources, and no meaningful gain. When assessment efforts are shown to be clear, elegant, and capable of producing results that make us look good, engagement is more likely. This session will present strategies to create and support an assessment culture.

Communication is the heart of problem-solving and conflict resolution. Many see an egalitarian approach to be the most effective – that is, everyone is treated equally and in the same way. In fact, this approach may be inherently unequal, because different types of people need different things. Deans must recognize how tricky the terrain is at times and adapt accordingly. Department chairpersons are typically those who field complaints from stakeholders initially and decide who owns the problem. Faculty members have valid expectations for communication from various organizational levels that enable them to be effective. This session will address communication issues from all three perspectives and suggest some techniques to avoid miscommunication.

31. Campus Synergy: Advancing Your Department’s Value to the University
Ralph Linstra
Liberty University

21st century higher education costs will continue to escalate. University administrators will become more obsessed with cost containment while on a never-ending journey to identify new revenue streams. And departmental chairpersons will be under increasing pressure to justify their leadership ability to financially manage their department effectively. This future is now! Although fearful for some of us, for others it is an opportunity to promote a spirit of Campus Synergy and our Department’s Value to the university community. This presentation will explain the concept, provide first-hand examples and suggest the necessary steps to complete the Campus Synergy concept successfully.

39. Assessment of On-Line Programs – A Programmatic Approach
   - Steve Canipe
   - Walden University

This presentation illustrates a practical application of a program outcomes assessment process in online environments with results being used to guide programmatic changes. Various NCATE member organizations’ standards were used in developing Walden University’s five part performance objectives in the master’s degree programs. These objectives were linked to program outcomes and ultimately to a program portfolio. The entire process was designed to maximize student attainment of skills being described in the various standards’ documents. Triangulation of various data points helping ensure accuracy in assessment will be described. The procedures and processes that are the topic of this presentation would be beneficial to any chairperson charged with determining program effectiveness.

42. The Role of the Department Chairperson in a Transitioning Institution
   - Joan C. Ficke
   - Montclair State University

The role of a department chairperson in an institution in growth and transition presents challenges that must be met if the transition is to go smoothly. This workshop will propose ways and means of coping with change, and will promote dialog among the participants to enable them to refine, expand, and question the proposals. In the course of the dialog, emphasis will be placed on the necessity of candid assessment of problems, developing trust between chairpersons and representatives of the Provost’s office, and the special circumstances resulting from participation by Union officers and Faculty Senators in decision-making. Participants will be asked to briefly describe their institutions in order to facilitate a pointed dialog on how chairpersons can best manage change.

This paper will present an overview of a comprehensive, Center-based initiative to develop and sustain community partnerships for service. The KSU CCP was founded in 2003 with the purpose of providing service to area human service organizations. The Center for Nonprofit and Public Leadership’s main strength is its ability to actively reflect Kennesaw State University’s values of public service and applied research. The Center offers assistance to public and nonprofit human service agencies in the areas of training, program development, and research to substantively address specific areas of concern throughout Georgia and the nation. The Center actively seeks out partnerships, grants, and activities to highlight the Kennesaw State University value of community service and engagement. This workshop will first present an overview of the Center’s conceptualization and implementation, and will use this foundation to facilitate a discussion among participants related to developing partnerships for service, research, consultation, and training.

Conference Evaluation-ONLINE

Your feedback is very important to us as we plan future programs. A conference survey will be available on the conference web site www.dce.ksu.edu/academicchairpersons for you to complete when you return home. Please follow these simple directions:

1. Click on Current Conference
2. Click on Conference Content
3. Enter florida as your user name and orlando as your password
4. Click on Conference Survey and follow the prompts

The survey will be available through March 3, 2006.

If you prefer to complete a paper survey, they are available at the registration desk.

This presentation will focus on providing very practical recommendations and techniques for making meaningful class observations used for performance appraisals and the improvement of teaching. The participants will learn how to conduct the observation using Clinical Supervision and Peer Coaching models. Observation and criteria guides, sample observation forms, and additional handouts will enable the participants to immediately put into practice their learned knowledge and skills.

47. Chairs in Transition: Mentoring Women Faculty in the Changing Academy
Terri Hasseler
Bryant University

Mentoring new faculty by guiding them through tenure is perhaps the most important responsibility of the chair. We address the impact of both ancient academic traditions and emerging capitalistic and corporate trends on the chair’s ability to mentor women faculty in the paradoxically entrenched and ever-changing academic environment. We provide an overview of the critical research, as well as suggest specific actions that chairs can take to equip new faculty for the academy.
