I volunteered with middle school students at Writers' Room, and I worked on helping students with homework, giving feedback on some writing, and so on.

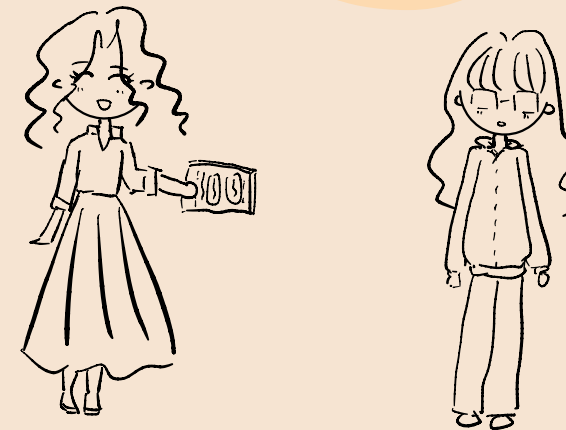

During this experience, I not only got unforgettable experience, but also some useful skills like how to communicate with others.

First time of Service.

The middle of service.

Supervisor gives me many source, like how to communicate with students and how to give effective feedback. Whenever I speak, she listens patiently and always smiles to me.

The middle of service.

I first have a communication with a student. We share some interesting things and I also ask her about college life.

The end of service.

Hi! How's going? Do you have a good weekend? Do you need any help with your homework?

I took the initiative to greet teachers and students in Writers' Room, and ask if there is anything I could do to help.

At beginning of my service, I was very anxious and worried about how to communicate with others. During the service, my supervisor was patiently and always encourage me. I tried to talk with a student and I found she is really friendly and I realized that communication is not as difficult as I thought.

- Be confident
- Be friendly
- Show trust and respect.
