

FOUR ON THE COUCH

Have each player write their name down on a slip of paper. Divide the players into two teams. Begin sitting people by alternating teams. Once everyone has sat down, there should be one empty chair (it cannot be on The Couch). Finally, randomly distribute the slips of paper so that everyone has someone else's name.

Each player assumes the identity of the player on their slip of paper. The player to the left of the empty seat begins by saying anyone's name (except for the name on their paper). The person with that name on their paper moves to the empty seat and switches papers with the person who called them.

For example:

Casey, being the player to the left of the empty seat says "Skyler"

Skyler doesn't move, but Cameron, the person with the slip of paper that says "Skyler", gets up and moves to the empty seat.

Cameron gives Casey the paper that says "Skyler" and Casey gives Cameron the piece of paper they had before. Casey will now move if "Skyler" is called again.

After people have moved and shuffled papers, the person who is to the left of the empty seat begins again by calling a name (except the name just called).

The game ends when everyone on The Couch is part of one team, and that team wins!
