

The Freudian Research Seminar Series (FRSS)Call for Papers

The Freud Museum London is delighted to announce a second cycle of the Freudian Research Seminar Series (FRSS) commencing this autumn. The FRSS convenes virtually once every month and seeks to establish a forum which both cultivates and circulates new psychoanalytically informed research. We welcome both PhD students and Researchers across disciplines to participate and form a community in which new ideas can be openly discussed and developed.

To celebrate our forthcoming exhibition: Housekeeper, our theme for the second series is 'Home'. We are looking for papers between 30–40 minutes in length to be delivered from October to June. Potential topics include but are not limited to:

- Homelessness: the loss of home; or providing therapy to those in financial crisis
- Renting v. Ownership of a home and its mental impact
- Displacement and the refugee crisis
- 'The ego is not master in its own house'; home between body and mind
- Construction of identity (gender, sexuality, ethnicity) through the domestic space
- Home as the parental domain
- Cinematic / Literary / Artistic representations and engagements with the domestic space
- 20 Maresfield Gardens / 19 Bergasse
- The domestic space as setting for psychoanalytic practice
- Furniture, between commodity and memory
- Home and the unhomely (uncanny)

We also are accepting off-theme submissions; however, we will be prioritising on-theme proposals as well as those from PhD students and early-career researchers.

To apply, please submit a Word document containing a title, an abstract between 200–300 words and a short bio to Perry Hughes and Tom DeRose at perry@freud.org.uk and tom@freud.org.uk

The deadline for submissions is July 25. We will respond to all applicants by August 25 and release a schedule in the week commencing with the 1st September.

We look forward to reading your submissions. Please direct any queries you have to perry@freud.org.uk
