Abstract

Finals are approaching and oftentimes, the most difficult part about math isn't doing the computations or doing steps of writing proof, rather it's knowing where to start, being okay with erasing work, and knowing when you're done. We will discuss ways to start problems, ideas on how to rethink a problem to find a simpler solution, how to get out of trouble during the work, and how to feel confident that you've finished. A range of mathematics will be focused on, from high school level algebra to proof-based mathematics, so there's something to learn for everyone!
